U.S. and Allies Set Tighter Controls On Sales to Russia

By Joseph Fitchett

PARIS - In a tense two-day meeting this week with other NATO nations and Japan about sensitive exports to the Soviet Un-ion, the Reagan administration ob-tained general assent to the need to modernize the allies' system of safeguarding military technology, according to U.S. and European participants.

But the allies rejected pleas for a more sweeping clampdown on Western industrial cooperation with the Soviet Union, as sought by many hard-liners in the Reagan administration, according to sources familiar with discussions held in Paris on Tuesday and Wednesday by the Control Committee on Trade With Communist Countries

"The Americans came with stringent demands, and we finally reached a compromise," a West European source said, adding that European governments had defended the principal of expanding European-Soviet trade. West Germany and many smaller European governments re-portedly said they needed industrial exports to the Eastern bloc to resist the economic slump and rising unemployment.

A Closed Meeting

The Cocom meeting, the first large-scale meeting of the monitoring agency since it established the strategic embargo against the Sovi-et Unioo at the height of the Cold War 20 years ago, was held behind closed doors, and delegates refused to comment publicly.

A laconic communiqué said the committee unanimously agreed about the need to review adaptation of Cocom's methods to the ev-olution of the world situation, notably in the field of strategic tech-

But U.S. and European participants, speaking on condition they not be identified, provided an overall picture of a Reagan adminlied governments of the need for severely restricting Soviet access to Western technology and high-technology products.

The U.S. delegation was led by James L. Buckley, the undersecretary of state for security assistance, and it included key officials such as the Defense Department's undersecretary for policy, Fred Ikle, and the deputy assistant secretary of commerce, Bohdan Denysyk, who have been outspoken about the need to curtail oot only Soviet access to technology with military applications but also broader economic enoperation that strengthens the Soviet Unioo's in-dustrial base.

While resisting the more extreme U.S. views, Europeans reportedly agreed on the need for more sophisticated review procedures of exports.

To prove that nominally civilian technologies acquired in the West have been diverted to military uses by the Soviet Union, the U.S. delegation provided classified briefings to other participants about specific cases and about the alleged cumulative effect of Western know-how in enabling the Soviet Union to improve its military capability quickly and cheaply.

Invoking security, officials refused to divulge the cases, but they said many involved computer software, optical resolution, frequency-switching radios, printed microcircuits, metal fabrication and precision engineering.

NATO, at U.S. urging, is carrying out a major study to determine what specific military advantages may have accrued to the Soviet Union from Western exports during the last decade. Explaining the Reagan administration's alarm, a senior official preparing for the Cocom meeting explained recently in Washington: "During detente, the Soviets saved billions of dollars and many years in their military buildup because of the systematic way in which they combined legitimate purchases, espionage and access to open

He added: "A major new development in the last few years is the way much of the most sophisticated research has moved out of the military-funded labs and into the private sector, where Soviet purchasing agents can acquire or ac-quaint themselves with it even before our security people recognize its military potential."

Killer of U.S. Colonel May Have Had an Accomplice

PARIS - French police are convinced that the killer of an assistant U.S. military attaché, LL Col. Charles R. Ray, had an accomplice, and anthorities have been questioning residents in the neighborhood where the officer was slain, investigators said Thursday.

Authorities also believe there may have been several witnesses to the shooting Monday in addition to a passer-by and a policeman who saw the killer from a distance and who have already reported to police,

The assailant, who killed Col. Ray with a 7.65mm gun, was described by the two witnesses as a Middle Eastern type, in his early 30s, of short build and dressed in a careless way, investigators said. They said they were convinced that several other persons had seen the killer but for various reasons had not reported it to the police.

Begin Assures Reagan Israel Wants to Uphold Cease-Fire in Lebanon

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Prime Minister Menachem Begin, in a letter to President Reagan, has reassured him that Israel will not launch military attacks into Lebanon unless there is a "clear provocation" from Palestinian or Syrian forces, ac-cording to Israeli and administra-

The letter was delivered by Ambassadnr Ephraim Evron to Secre-tary of State Alexander M. Haig r. during a luncheon at the State Department on Tuesday, officials said. It was in reply to a recent message from Mr. Reagan to Mr. Begin expressing concern about the recent course of U.S.-Israeli re-lations, including U.S. apprehen-sion about a possible Israeli move into Lebanon that might violate the six-month-old cease-fire there. Officials in Israel briefed reporters on some aspects of the letter, and sources in Washington familiar with its contents also commented. The overall tone of the letter was said to have been friendly, in keeping with a common effort to avoid further recriminations and to put relations back on a cordial

An official in Mr. Begin's office in Jerusalem said that the prime minister wrote Mr. Reagan that would be "a national trauma, painful and tremendously difficult. The nfficial said Mr. Begin had conveyed to Mr. Reagan the view that "the Egyptians are not belping us by their recent talk of self-determination and East Jerusalem. Why do they have to talk about these things at all at this time?"

The aide stressed that this was the sense of the letter, not the exact wording.

Mr. Begin was also reported to have told the White House that he was confident that Egypt would honor the peace treaty, at least un-til the withdrawal, which is sched-uled to be completed April 25. He repeated his pledge to carry it out on time. Mr. Haig was in Israel and Egypt last week and will return there next week as part of an U.S. effort to provide new impetus to the inconclusive negotiations on Palestinian self-rule. In his letter, Mr. Begin pointed out that Israel was unhappy with recent state-ments from Egyptian leaders that the autonomy talks should lead to tinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, Israeli officials said.

Mr. Haig, during his talks last week, found that the basic disagreement between Egypt and Isra-el was over the ultimate goal of Palestinian autonomy, a concept agreed to in outline form during the Camp David agreements of September, 1978. The Egyptians stress that the "full autonomy" called for in the Camp David accords means that the Palestinians should eventually have "self-determination," leading in a separate state or some confederation with Jordan. The Israelis, who are opposed to a sepa-rate Palestinian state, regard the expression "self-determination" as a code word for a state. U.S. officials said Mr. Begin wanted to reinforce his opposition to any Palestinian state in his letter Of more interest to the Ameri-

Pentagon Said to Back C-5s for Crisis Force

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department has recommended to President Reagan that 50 Lockheed C-5 Galaxy cargo aircraft, once a symbol of Pentagon cost overruns; be bought to start a multihillion-dollar program of acquiring aerial transport for the gressional officials say.

The Air Force, meanwhile, signed contracts Wednesday with Rockwell International worth $2.2 billion to begin building a fleet of the new B-l long-range bombers, 100 of which are scheduled to be completed by 1989. The first B-l is due off the assembly line in early

The Galaxy recommendation, long awaited after a heated competition and much political inlighting, drew an unusually testy com-ment from the loser, McDonnell Douglas, which said it was "dismayed" by a decision that made a "mockery" of the compen-

Although the Pentagon has made nn official announcement, staff members of the Georgia and Missouri congressional delegations disclosed details of the recommendation Wednesday. The Lockheed plane would be produced in Georgia; the McDonnell Douglas headquarters is in St. Louis. The congressional officials said they considered the recommendation tantamount in a decision since Mr. Reagan, who apparently in-tends to include the program in the 1983 military budget that goes to along with the vast majority of rec-ommendations from Secretary of Defense Casper W. Weinberger.

Worth $4.58 Billion The Lockheed order, the congressional officials said, calls for contracts worth $4.58 billion, with the first plane to be finished in 1985 and the production run to be completed by 1989.

If Mr. Reagan approves the recommendation as expected, it would mean reviving the production of a highly controversial air-about $2 billion more to build than planned, plus $1.4 billioo to replace wings found to be too weak to sustain long bours of flying.

For the taxpayers, those con-tracts would be the first installments in two expensive, long-range programs. Pentagon officials have estimated that the total cost of the C-5s over the life of the program would be $25 billion, while some congressional officials said their estimates run up to $40 billion. The cost of the fleet of B-1 bombers has been set at $20.5 hillion. with some congressional estimates running up to $30 billion. Neither figure included inflation factors or operating costs.

The transport planes are intended to carry tanks and other vehicles, helicopters, ammunition and supplies for the Rapid Deploy-ment Force if it is sent to the Gulf region. The planes would also serve U.S. forces in Europe or South Korea and their reinforcements.

After the deployment force was furmed in 1979, the Air Force began evaluating candidates for what was known as the C-X aircraft, a new cargo plane. Among them was an updated version of the Lockheed C-5, with advanced electronics; a new plane called the C-17, proposed by McDonnell Douglas; and a military version of the Boeing 747 passenger airliner.

Developer Picked

Lasi August, Air Fnrce Secretary Verne Orr announced that McDonnell Douglas "has been selected as the Air Force's prime contractor to develop the C-X cargo aircraft." But the announcement added: "The selection of McDonnell Douglas as the prime contractor douglas as the prime contractor douglas as the prime contractor does not represent an Air Fnrce commitment to build

Even so, Lockheed in September made what it called a "firm, fixed-price" offer of $4.18 billion for 44 aircraft, contending that no funds would be needed for research and development, that it could deliver operating aircraft earlier than other candidates and that the Air

120 Polish Intellectuals, Artists Petition for an End to Martial Law

WARSAW - A sharply worded petition against martial law and its acts of repression signed by more than 120 leading intellectuals and artists was sent Thursday to the Polish parliament and the Roman Catholic primate, Archbishop Jozef Glemp.
The petition, which includes an appeal to the United Nations committee for Human Rights, is the strongest written protest to date against the Dec. 13 military It presents the military authori-

Haig to Give Gromyko U.S. Views on Poland At Meeting in Geneva

By Don Oberdorfer

Weshington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. will take U.S. objections to Soviet pressures on Poland in person to the Kremlin's leadership in a meeting early next week with Soviet For-eign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, according to official sources.

The planned discussions in Geneva between Mr. Haig and Mr. Gromyko are also expected to cover a possible Soviet-American sum-mit meeting and the beginning of a new round of talks on the limitation of strategic arms.

However, an early summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev does not seem likely under present circumstances, U.S. sources said, and it is no longer a matter of course that next week's Haig-Gromyko talks will set a date for the beginning of the long-awaited strategic arms control talks.

Mr. Brezhnev's proposal and one by Mr. Reagan urging the Russians to dismantle all their medium-range rockets in return for agreement by the Western alliance not to proceed with the deployment in Europe of a new genera-tion of U.S. missiles were placed on the table when the talks opened in Geneva on Nov. 30.

There appears to have been little movement since then, but Mr. Ti-khonov, in his speech, appeared to be saying that both sides should compromise so as to reach an agreement that could lead on to accommodations on other arms

"In our opinion, the talks that have started in Geneva create a possibility for making a step, which is so important now, in solving the entire set of questions of arms limitations and disarma-ment," he said. Mr. Stockman, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and Murray L. As part of the U.S. drive to dry up Soviet ability to exploit West-ern industrial advances, the Reagan administration is also advocating a reduction in scientific exchanges with the Soviet Union. "It's proved a one-way street, with the West learning about Soviet archaeology while Soviet nuclear physicists snoop around U.S. labs whose work includes classified government research," a U.S. official said

Some officials in the Reagan administration are also trying to re-strict the amount of scientific information that circulates in unclassified form in the United States.

While the planned Siberian gas pipeline to Western Europe was not on the Cocom agenda, a senior U.S. official attending the meeting told reporters that the United States deplored the prospect of large Soviet hard-currency earn-ings from it that would finance 14ture purchases of Western technology.

If the United States managed to deny all U.S. technology and know-how to the pipeline, he said, the project would be delayed, cost much more and operate at much lower efficiency.

Such an effort, he acknowledged, would involve tricky legal efforts aimed at canceling retroactively U.S. licensing agreements with Western European companies involved in the project. No such decision had been made by the Reagan administration, he said.

U.S. Vetoes Measure On Golan Dispute in UN Security Council

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. -The United States vetoed a compromise Security Council resolution that called for the punishment of Israel for annexing the Golan

Nine nations, the minimum number required for approval, voted Wednesday for the resolution. Britain, France, Japan, Ire-land and Panama abstained.

The resolution's vague central passage said nations "should conunspecified measures to reverse Israel's action, a form of voluntary sanction. But the document also said countries should cut Israel off from all aid, a demand for undefined compulsory measures.

All of this was far less severe than Syria's nriginal demand that nations break military, economic and diplomatic relations with Israel. It was also milder than the text Syria backed last Friday, a call to cut off arms and suspend econom-

But that document could not get the necessary nine votes and so Wednesday's softened version was substituted and won support from twn Third World holdouts, Zaire and Togo.

Now Syria has enough votes in the council to call a special session of the General Assembly. One is expected to be held in a week or two at which the issue will be considered again.
Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the U.S.

representative, charged that the resolution was "an aberration, even a perversion of the very pur-pose of the Security Council." But the document "would become a source of aggravation" that would "sow suspicions and feed hostilities" in the Middle East, she said. The prolonged council debate contributed to increased tensions, Mrs. Kirkpatrick said, "unleashing a flood tide of invective" and drawing delegates "into vicious ex-

She reminded the council that the United States had joined in its unanimous judgment last month that Israel's action was illegal. Mrs. Kirkpatrick chided the council for "so much talk of aggression, repression and the desires of people" without debating "the massive, hrutal repression of the people of Poland."

What an extraordinary institution this is," she said, noting that a month after the imposition of martial law in Poland "there has been no mention here of the violation of their human rights, the violations of the United Nations Charter, the Helsinki declaration, the Universal Declaration of the Human Rights that have occurred there."

As for the Golan Heights and the Middle East, Mrs. Kirkpatrick said, the best course is to "get on with negotiations."

The Soviet delegate, Oleg A. Troyanovsky, contended that the vetoed document did not go far enough, that it failed to provide decisive measures against Israel." He charged Israel with pursuing a policy of "permanent aggression against the Arab states" and said was one more instance.

Mr. Troyanovsky said Israel could not engage in such a course without U.S. support and accused Washington of giving Israel "a mandate" to annex the Golan Heights. American words of disapproval and its suspension of the strategic cooperation accord with fsrael that followed the takeover were a mask. "The U.S. and Israel are forging a strategic alliance in the Middle East," the Soviet delegate said.

Mr. Troyanovsky voted for the resolution along with China, Po-land, Spain, Uganda, Guyana, Jordan, Zaire and Togo.

For Israel, Yehuda Z. Blum dis-missed "exercises of this kind" that "cannot contribute to the promotion of peace." Instead, he said.
"honest dialogue and negotiation" are required. Mr. Blum appealed to Syria "to abandon the path of confrontation and hatred" and accept Israel's offer for unconditional negotiations on all the issues between them.

For Syria, Dia-Allah el-Fattal, his voice quivering with rage, de-nounced the U.S. veto as "tyran-ny" and declared that it "unmasked the real face of the United States of America." He said it was an "abuse of veto power to aim at aggravating a situation." The United States is "protecting the aggres-sors against its victims," he said. The resolution killed by the U.S.

Russia Reportedly Force-Fed Priest

LONDON - A Russian Orthodox priest imprisoned last year on charges of anti-Soviet agitation was force-fed by the authorities in a successful attempt to end a recent hunger strike by the priest, a Roman Catholic group said Thursday. Kirkpatrick: Limiting the Damage

After a Year on Job, UN Delegate Cites Problems

By Bernard D. Nossiter New York Times Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. After a year on the job, Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the U.S. delegate to the United Nations, acknowledges that she is frequently frustrated but says she has no plans to resign "for the foreseeable future."

"I am deeply bothered by the fact that it's so difficult to achieve any positive outcomes from an American point of view," she said in an interview. "We are so often involved in damage limitation," especially in the General Assembly and the Security Council, she said. She cited her work in the council over the last two weeks, helping to thwart, at least temporarily, a Syrian resolution to punish Israel for annexing the Golan Heights. When the resolution finally came to a vote in the Security Council on Wednesday, it was vetoed by the United States.

"I'm a problem solver," Mrs. Kirkpatrick said, and simply avert-ing defeat for policies of the Reagan Administration was "frus-trating."

Vocal About Irritations "It matters when nations attack each other," she said. "It is harder to solve problems, seek solutions." Mrs. Kirkpatrick is vocal about her irritations here, and this has inspired a number of reports asserting that she is about to resign. ily. "I get awfully sick of the shuttle," she said. Three or more times a week, she flies between her post in New York and Cabinet or National Security Council meetings in But she insisted: "I have no intention of resigning. I intend to stay on for the foreseeable future." Some reports have held that Mrs. Kirkpatrick has threatened to resign because she is distressed over the lack of a stronger response to the crackdown in Poland. But she said: "I never threaten. That's not my style. When I resign. I'll lay a piece of paper on the president's desk."

Despite her concern over the limitations of her post, she is con-vinced that "we did a useful jnb here last year; we've come out rather well." As a positive achievement, she is particularly satisfied with her role in helping raise a $560-million emergency fund last spring for African refugees fleeing tribal, civil and national wars. The United States' share was $285 million. In the more familiar area of limiting political damage, Mrs. Kirkpatrick cited her work last summer in negotiating a unanimous Security Council resolution that con-demned Israel for bombing an Iraqi nuclear reactor hut spared Israel from sanctions.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick's latest ex-ercise in defending administration policy involved heading off a Syr-ian resolution to deny Israel arms and suspend economic aid because of its annexation of the Golan Heights. Syria could count on only seven of the Security Council's 15 seven of the Security Council's 15 reports that the United States had promised aid, arms or trade to restrain those three countries, but Mrs. Kirkpatrick emphatically deg marshe is about to lesgar. In her talks with each of the three Third World delegates, Mrs. Kirkpatrick said, she stressed that "the adversaries of his country are the same as the adversaries of my country, and we should be elear about whom we weaken and whom we strengthen."

Aides to Mrs. Kirkpatrick said this message was reinforced by an amendment to the foreign aid bill. It calls on the president to take note of recipients who dissociate themselves from a statement that

The Commerce Department, which enforces export laws involving nonmilitary equipment approved the proposed sale in February, 1978. Oshkosh and its distributor, Rioca, proceeded with plans to close the deal, involving a total sale of 400 trucks and spare parts for $70 million, according to Oshlansh executives.

Contracts were drafted and signed, including a performance bond that ohligated Oshkosh in pay 10 percent of the purchase price to the buyer if the company could not deliver the vehicles.

At about the same time, Oshkosh executives appealed 10 Sen. Proxmire and other congressmen for help. The senator recalled that he had arranged a meeting with Secretary of State Cyrus R. In a letter dated June 23, 1980. and addressed to the Technical Committee of the Lihyan Armed Forces, a Rioca executive provided technical specifications for the work and equipment necessary to modify the trucks so they could carry lanks.

A person familiar with the truck modifications in Libya said the additions had been built with parts purchased in Austria.

Oshkosh officials estimated that the changes cost Libya $15 million. They said it would have heen cheaper for Libya in huy 400 tank transporters from West European manufacturers, who do not face export restrictions. Sources familiar with the modification work said it had been done at Libyan military installations by mechanics recruited in Canada

In a telephone interview, Jackie Pass, the president of Rioca, refused in comment on the letters or the modification.

Mr. Sill, the Oshkosb president, said Thursday that his company had filed suit against Rioca in Switzerland earlier last week. "We were defrauded," he said. Mr. Sill also said that Oshkosh had played no role in the truck modification.

State Department officials said they had blocked all sales of similar equipment to Libya after learning about the modification of the Oshkosh trucks and had ordered Oshkosh not to supply spare parts ın Libya.

Federal law-enforcement officials said that modification of the trucks would have violated U.S. law if the changes had been made in the United States or had involved American citizens or corpocould do nothing when the embargo against military sales to Libya was violated by foreigners.

John Panettiere, president of Fiat-Allis, was quoted Wednesday as saying prospects were "very, very favorable" for the Libyan contract.

About half the order would be assembled at the company's Springfield plant, its only U.S. production facility, he said. The rest would be completed in overseas plants.

Production on the Libyan order would begin within two months, and the estimated 225 units of heavy equipment would be ready for delivery in July or August, Mr. Panettiere said.

Presidential Education

In no area of public policy did President Reagan's mandate appear more urgent a year ago than in foreign policy and defense. Previous administrations, he charged, had left America's prestige in tatters and its security in peril. He identified Soviet expansionism as the principal menace to American well-being, and be promised, by "rearming" and by as-serting American will, to contain it effectively. Iran's release of the hostages on the day of his inauguration seemed to attest to a general recognition that Washington was getting serious about power again.

A year later everything seems fuzzier. In foreign affairs, the early Reagan inclination to base policy on a hard, consistent ideological line has broadened to include -although more in deed than word - a more pragmatic readiness to accommodate anxious allies and domestic constituencies: to negotiate on arms control with those nasty, untrustworthy Russians, for instance, at the same time as be offers a serious strategic arms program.

Some of the countries considered to be most in need of a strong American anti-Communist embrace have shied away from it. Larger regional considerations have induced Mr. Reagan to take a little distance from countries - Israel, Taiwan and to a lesser degree South Africa - that had looked forward to special favor. In defense, meanwhile, the president faces immense pressures across most of the political spectrum to scale back planned spending increases.

The public seems to retain confidence in Mr. Reagan's stewardship, but after a year his aides keep having to explain wby he should not be expected to master the fine detail. In some respects, he is no better a manager of policy than was his much-abused predecessor, Jimmy Carter.

It goes without saying that in various matters - El Salvador is the leading case - Mr. Reagan has confirmed the apprehensions of liberals who voted against him. The stunning development, however, lies elsewhere. A year that began with release of the hostages ended with members of Mr. Reagan's core constituency complaining that he had kowtowed to Peking in the matter of selling new aircraft to Taiwan and that in Poland he had allowed what should have been exclusively a Soviet embarrassment to become the most serious Atlantic crisis in 30 years.

That things have not worked out according to plan is intolerable to some Reagan advisers and supporters. Some would recall the president to his ideological and political roots. Others would recast even further the structure, procedure and personnel on the national security side. Still others would consummate a grand design in one big speech. We cannot get too excited about any of these three courses. Something else seems to us to be more important.

Mr. Reagan came to foreign policy believing that the United States enjoyed a special dispensation allowing it to ignore the limitations - of resources, of politics, of knowledge and imagination and luck - that circumscribe the conduct of other nations. He is beginning to accommodate all this in his thinking, and to do so exposes him to charges of inconsistency and of falling away from principle. It also exposes him to wobbles and mistakes. But from the country's point of view, this is not the worst thing. The worst thing would be to resist learning and, where necessary, changing. The true believers are aghast at what they take to be intimations of apostasy. But the results of a presidential education need not be the old product. Mr. Reagan was elected because Americans thought they needed a stronger hand. If be has not yet been fully tested, nothing in his first year suggests that he cannot be trusted in his turn at the belm. He has been looking for his own combination of firmness and flexibility, constancy of principle and sureness of style. It is far too soon to say he cannot find it.

Why More Poison Gas?

President Reagan stands at the brink of a reckless decision to break a 12-year moratorium and produce a new poison gas weapon.

He does not need it or the trouble it will bring. The Pentagon wants a new nerve gas primarily for European defense, but that could ignite another row with the allies, who have not been seriously consulted and do not want the gas on their soil. It could trigger a new chemical weapons competition with Moscow, ending what hope remains for the long-pending treaty to ban such weapons. It could lead to even more repugnant chemical weaponry. And it could spread the industry until many nations and even terrorists gain access to poison gas, now stocked only by the two superpowers and France.

The only conceivable argument for gas weapons is that they would deter the Soviet Union from resorting to gas warfare. President Nixon decided in 1969 that deterrence was served by 3 million gas artillery shells and even larger bulk gas reserves. He therefore halted production and pledged to abide by the 1925 Geneva Protocol, which America initiated but never signed.

President Ford signed the Protocol, banning first use of poison gas, and pressed negotiations for a world treaty to outlaw chemical agents - like that which banned germ agents in 1975. Soviet reluctance about onsite inspection became the main obstacle, but some progress has been made.

Yet the Reagan Pentagon has quadrupled its chemical warfare requests to $810 million for 1983, partly to begin producing the new gas, and asks $1.4 billion for 1984. The presi-dent has tentatively agreed, but be cannot have considered the true financial and diplomatic costs of the decision.

The Pentagon plan requires up to $4 billion for new gas weapons and $3.7 billion to destroy the old — and even more for defensive equipment, research and development, pay for chemical troops and service-wide training. That would be an extraordinary waste of money for an improved World War I weapon that no nation found worth using in World War II. Against protected troops, nerve gas is less effective than high explosives. In a European war, unprotected civilians would be the main victims.

The only impressive evidence of a Soviet buildup in the chemical warfare field is the provision of new protective equipment and training. A comparable American defensive effort added to existing gas stocks should be deterrence enough. Reports that the Russians used toxic agents in Afghanistan and Indochina have not been fully confirmed. Besides, they describe small-scale use against unprotected people in remote areas.

The Army argues that existing stocks of nerve gas are deteriorating and leaking and that a "binary" gas would be safer to handle; its two nonlethal components would be combined only after a shell was fired. But civilian scientists, like Professor Matthew Meselson of Harvard, say the leaks have been trivial and that the old stocks, with improved maintenance, could last indefinitely. There has been no serious accident in transport or storage in 30 years.

The binary gas would certainly require fewer precautions. But it is unwanted in Europe, is no more potent than the old gas and could not be a decisive weapon. Those are reasons enough not to squander money or energy on the project.

The Unknown Traveler

It never seems more than a few days before the contention, the bickering, the tugging at the idol begin. And now, right on schedule, it is here: Was there really a heroic "man in the water" who gave his life in the course of helping other Air Florida Flight 90 victims to live? Maybe it was more than one. Maybe it was no one; maybe the whole thing was a misperception. No, come the responses from others, there was such a man. Whence flows much argument as to which man it was.

One gets an intimation from all this that even if and when the existence and identity of the man is established, it will be only a matter of time before some researcher somewhere is quoted as saying that the poor fellow, suffering from bypothermia, probably didn't even know what he was doing.

Our own feeling is that very little of this argument matters. That there was such a man appears to have been certified by the rescuers themselves. It would be nice if his identity could be established, comforting to an anguished family and gratifying to all, in that it would result in an act of heroism being suitably recognized and attributed to one who deserves special respect.

But the act itself has been memorialized already in the emotions of those countless Americans who heard of it, who gave it full range in their imagination, who felt their own humanity honored and enlarged because of it. In an essay in Time magazine, Roger Rosenblatt has written movingly of the man in the water: "He was the best we can do." That, it seems to us, has it exactly right. The anonymity, so far, of the hero does no more to diminish the grandeur of his act than such anonymity does, say, to diminish the sacrifice made by the unknown soldier. On the contrary, in a strange way it universalizes it. THE WASHINGTON POST.

The World says: "That such an amazing and versatile ass as Sir James Alexander Swettenham should be governor of Jamaica at a time like this is a British misfortune. Kissinger on Foreign Policy: First, Coherence

WASHINGTON —A year ago, it was being said that it was dangerous to isolate one topic as the sole object of negotiation; linkage was the watchword. Arms control, in that concept, had to follow a military buildup and proceed on a broad front. High-level meetings were to reflect careful preparation and reward restrained Sovi-et conduct. All these premises are being cast overboard as negotiations at the highest levels continue while the vestiges of freedom in Poland are being smulfed out.

Every administration learns from experience, of course,

Every administration learns from experience, of course, but drastic reversals, especially midway in a crisis, run the risk of appearing panicky, of undermining credibility abroad and demoralizing well-wishers at home.

Moreover, many of the original Reagan arguments had merit. To be sure, it is easy to disparage linkage — to demonstrate that nothing will ever happen if everything is linked to everything else. But the art of policy-making is to have a sense of nuance. If the Soviets can insulate particular areas of negotiation - such as arms control from their international conduct, they are being handed a device for regulating tensions they cause and absolving themselves of their aggressions. Especially those who be-lieve in the importance of East-West talks should be concerned that diplomacy not become a form of psychological warfare, that talks are serious and obligations reciprocal Detente is not appeasement.

A policy of coexistence must be defended against intransigence. I believe it would have ultimately served the cause of negotiations far better had the United States, early in the Polish crisis, declared a moratorium on high-level contacts with the Soviet Union until martial law was lifted in Poland, the Solidarity leaders were released and the military rulers began some form of discourse with the church and the union. U.S. East-West diplomacy has been confrontational in periods of relative calm and apparently eager to negotiate when challenged. A reversal of these attitudes would serve the prospects of peace better.

The causes of the current state of affairs go back many years. The Reagan team inherited a record of shifts made without adequate consultation with allies and of episodic upheavals in U.S. leadership and policies. These go far to explain why Europe no longer rushes to follow America's lead. But whatever the ultimate cause, the administration should use the occasion of the crisis in Poland to learn, to review its procedures and to redefine purposes.

With respect to the Atlande alliance, the following tasks seem to me of the highest priority.

A Notion of Security

The root problem of relations with the allies, which the Polish crisis has so brutally exposed, is not procedural but structural — not that the United States does not consult enough but that it is uncertain of the purpose of Atlantic consultation. Today the Atlantic alliance lacks a security doctrine that takes realistic account of the growing nuclear stockpiles in both the East and the West and the new reaches of Soviet conventional power.

In the past, alliances represented a pooling of strength; in contrast, NATO has far too long operated as if it were a unilateral American nuclear guarantee. And it contin-ties to function in this way although the specter of the casualties of nuclear war has upset all previous verides about war. Historically, surrender was considered worse than resistance. For many, the cataclyamie consequences of nuclear war have reversed that motivation. To them, nothing seems worse than a nuclear holocaust.

The result is a combination of neutralism and pacifism. America is thought to have no choice except to defend Europe; Europe believes it risks nothing by political dissociation from the United States, lethargy on defense, and simultaneous resistance to U.S. measures such as the installation of missiles that represent in fact the logical consequence of European nuclear doctrine. Sooner or later this will lead to catastrophe. If we are serious about avoiding nuclear war and do not wish to yield to the ruthless, the alliance must build up its conventional forces. There is no choice. But a serious program to that effect is lacking on both sides of the Atlantic.

East-West Relations

Poland represents a fundamental challenge to East-West relations not only because of the brutal violation of the Helsinki accords. It does so primarily because of what it tells us about the Soviet perception of security. It is one By Henry A. Kissinger thing for the Soviet Unioo to seek to be secure against a hostile military presence in surrounding countries; it is quite another to equate security with a cordon of vassal states subject to an ultimate Soviet right to impose a totalitarian government on populations that overwhelm-ingly reject it. The United States can be forthcoming on Soviet strategic concerns; it must resist Moscow's claim to a constant right of intervention. Especially inadmissible is the proposition that the Red Army is the guaranter of the irreversibility of history, the enforcer of the rule that what is Communist is eternal and what is non-Communist is fair game for undermining, or worse.

This is the second of two articles.

The Function of Negotiations

Whether to negotiate with adversaries has unfortunately become a domestic issue and a source of friction in the alliance. This weakens America in four ways: In relatively calm periods, it allows the Soviets to present themselves as the apostles of peace; when the United States finally goes to the conference table, it looks like the result of allied and Soviet pressure rather than U.S. initiative; to establish its bona fides. America is then tempted into opening positions that look like (and sometimes are) complete reversals, casting doubt on its resolve; and once it is engaged in talks, these negotiating positions turn into ends in themselves, regardless of content.

U.S. rhetoric and strategy must be brought into balance. The need is for a program that avoids the twin dangers of abandoning the peace issue to adversaries without turning negotiating into a form of self-blackmail. In the long run, America serves the cause of peace best by precision, strict insistence on reciprocity and a view of the world respectful of legitimate Soviet concerns.

East-West Economic Links

A decade or so ago, when East-West trade, technology transfer and financial relations began to develop, many believed that economic ties could become an instrument — among others — for moderating Soviet conduct. In a crisis, it was thought, the fear of losing markets or access to raw materials. Western technical innovations or bank credits would produce Soviet caution. But this assump-tion presupposed a Western willingness to use its eco-nomic strength in the service of an overall strategy. That clearly has not happened.

On the contrary, so many Western nations have let themselves become dependent on Soviet trade that a trade cutoff is more likely to turn into a Soviet weapon against the West. American farmers this year take satisfaction in the sale of 23 million tons of food to the Soviet Union. But what will happen when all plantings and America's entire agricultural economy become perma-nently geared to this level of Soviet imports? Who then has the stronger oegotiating position?

Similarly, Western banks have been profligate in extending credit to Poland and other East Bloc countries—tending credit to Poland and other East Bloc countries—and free of considerations of state policy in doing so. The result is that they will be exposed if there is any letup in the breakneck pace of private lending to the East.

In 1976, the U.S. government recommended to a ministerial meeting of the Organizaton for Economic Cooperation and Development an urgent study to examine the implications and risks of East-West trade and credits—and the need for executive recordination respective. and the need for greater Western coordination regarding them. The effort has since languished. As a result, there are no agreed political criteria today for the management of East-West trade. The industrial nations compete fiercely to fulfill Lenin's dictum that the capitalists would in time fight over the privilege of selling the rope they would be hanged with. There is an urgent need to establish ground rules to guide East-West trade and finance.

Organization of Policy-Making

In setting up new National Security Council procedures in the White House, Judge Clark will want to review how America came to waste crucial weeks on essenview now America came to waste crucial weeks on essentially rhetorical exercises; determine which options were put forward primarily to stall for time, and above all expose the strategic assumptions that underlay the conflicting theories and proposals for presidential attention. He will want to make sure that, in the future, what reaches the Oval Office are the real choices.

But he must so beyond that the annual content of the content o

But he must go beyond that. He must ensure that the administration's foreign policy philosophy is clarified. For better or worse, a serious foreign policy requires a comprehensive central concept; without it, pronouncements are exercises in rhetoric, and actions are driven by short-term tactical consideration without coherence or short-term tacrical consideration without constraine or sense of direction. The policy-making process must be organized by efficient procedures. But, more importantly it must be organized by a hasic strategy.

Events have conspired in recent years to erode the forcign policy consensus in America and to create fault lines of opinion that cut across all strategic questions. The administration seems to me to be divided between a cew isolationism and traditional Atlanticism, between those isolationism and traditional Atlanticism; between those who regard as inevitable an apocalyptic showdown with the Soviet Union and those who think that managing the competition will remain a permanent feature of U.S. for-eign policy — with a gradual erosion of the Soviet system but no clear-cut terminal point; between those who regard trade, technology and finance as matters of private concern, subject only to pure market considerations, and those who see economic relationships, particularly with the Communist world, as so centrally important to the future of both the West and the East as to be an inherent part of the United States' public policy.

The strains generated by the competition between these contending points of view within the administration have been all too evident in the weeks following the repression in Poland. They will tug at policy in the months to come as well, until the administration moves to resolve them and in the process design a longer-term, fully rounded concept of U.S. strategy, resources and broader objectives in the world. Until these issues are settled, it will be inpossible even for the wisest of leaders to make more than momentary sense from the range of options presented to him by his staff each day for decision.

If we master these issues and in the process design a coherent policy, the Polish crisis will in the end generate a lasting benefit. If we fail, we shall remember these months not only with shame but as a decisive turning point in Western history.

A Chilean Reply

Regarding the article (IHT, Jan. 7) entitled "Pinochet's Chile Intensifies Policy of Intimidation as a System of Government": It is false to speak of arbitrary detentions. Detentions in Chile are based on arrest "in flagrante-delicto" or an order issued by a competent authority, according to law. In either case, the purpose of the de-tention is to make the necessary investigation with a view to keeping those detained at the disposal of the competent courts. The courts determine whether there are sufficient grounds for a trial, or order those detained released at once.

There are no political prisoners, that is, persons at the disposal of the executive authority. The legal time of detention by the executive is generally five days, and 20 days in the case of terrorism. After such time, the persons detained are turned over to the courts. In 1981, of 188 persons detained, only 37

To say that the persons who at-tempted to kill Rene Rojas, minister of external relations, did not die during the attempt is merely an empty statement as long as no evidence in support of it is supplied.

To say that repression has been intensified by the establishment of oew torture centers is a serious charge if valid evidence cannot be supplied. Torture, when duly established by the courts, is punished severely. This was the case of ex-security agents, protagonists of the events of Calama, who were sentenced to life imprisonment.

Of the six persons connected with the Christian left arrested in December 1981, only one is subject to the military jurisdiction for possession of firearms and explosives. The others are subject to the jurisdiction of the civil courts. The minister in charge of the investigation has released them on bail, and the Supreme Court will have to rule on this. The members of the "Coordinadora Sindical" have just been released on bail.

The writer is executive director of the National Association for the Southern Poor, a nonprofit organization that stresses self-help to overcome poverty. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

Efforts to assist the poor were not confined to welfare programs. It was not the intention of Lyndon B. Johnson and his fellow architects of the Greaty Society to create a permanent welfare state. Quite the contrary. As the National Journal put it recently, they "intended simply to provide the means - better education, better bousing, better health care and nutrition - by which the poor would lift themselves out of poverty."

The emphasis was on education.

The legislation that spearbeaded the national anti-poverty effort was drafted by the House Committee on Education and Labor. It was called the Equal Opportunity Act, and the titles of that act dealt with education because the traditional techniques of local school systems did not interrupt the transmission of poverty from one generation to the next.

Nor was the intention the redistribution of old wealth, despite re- Appalachian counties, mostly

Certainly, the Census Bureau's rediscovery of poverty is preferable to the Reagan administration's efforts to undiscover poverty. Language Controversy Resurfaces in Malaysia

By Kenneth L Whiting

The Associated Press
KUALA LUMPUR — A return to the basics of reading, writing and arithmetic in Malaysian primary schools has revived a lan-guage debate here. Some spokesmen for Malaysia's minority Chinese and Indian communities say the educational changes that took effect here this month could undermine use of the Chinese and Tamil languages. Tamil is spoken in southern India and northern Sri Lanka.

The critics view the stress on the three R's - reading, 'riting and rithmetic — as a scheme eventually to convert Chinese and Tamil primary schools into Malay-language institutions.

The Malaysian constitution says Bahasa Malaysia, the mother tongue of about half the population of 14 million, is the national language to be used for "all official purposes." ("Bahasa" is the Malay word for language.)

A Touchy Regional Issue

The new three-R system, in which all teaching materials are written in Bahasa and restrictions placed on music education, will eventually lead to a change in the character of Chinese schools," said a joint statement issued Jan. 10 by 54 Chinese associations. Lim Fon Seng, chairman of the United Chinese School Committees Associa-tion, said the plan will force the Chinese to give up their mother tongue, education and culture.

Few issues are as politically touchy in Malaysia and elsewhere in Sontheast Asia as language.
Singapore has four official languages: English, Mandarin, Tamil and Malay, Malay is designated the national language and English the language of administration. Despite years of government campaigns, many people in Singapore continue to speak in languages other than the approved four.

In the early years, the emphasis was largely on English, but that battle has been substantially won. Of Singapore's 2.4 million people, in recent years only about 10 percent of children entering school have chosen to be educated primarily in Mandarin, the official dia-lect of China.

In 1979, Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew of Singapore started a long-term program to eliminate such regional Chinese dialects as Hokkien and Cantonese. Every October is Speak-Mandarin-Not-Dialects Month in Singapore.

Indonesia had no post-independence struggle to establish Bahasa Indonesia as the chief tongue. That Malay-linked lan-guage was widely used for decades, and Japan's World War II occupation forces helped by abolishing the Dutch of colonial times.

However, some educators complained recently that too much English is creeping into everyday use and that regional dialects flourish to the detriment of Baha-

Indonesia and Malaysia agreed to adopt common spellings 10 years ago. A joint language board hopes to have standardized more than 850,000 Bahasa terms by next year, according to a spokesman for the Language and Literature Insti-tute in Kuala Lumpur.

British colonizers brought English to the Malay Peninsula in the 18th century. Because the peninsula was essentially rural and technologically backward, Malay seemed to have a dim future when the fed-eration of Malaysia was formed upon independence from Britain

Thousands of terms had to be coined to bring the language into the 20th century. Many are only slight variations on English, such as "elektron" for electron.

Diplomats say the turning point came in May, 1969, when post-election riots between the political-ly dominant Malays and the ecooomically powerful Chinese left hundreds dead in the streets of Knala Lumpur. It was then decided to reduce the importance of English and replace it with Bahasa by 1982 in the interest of oational

New Immigration Quota in U.S. Expected to Reunite Chinese Kin

By Michael Parks

Los Angeles Times Service
PEKING — New U.S. immigration regulations will nearly double the number of Chinese able to join relatives in the United States, U.S.

Embassy officials say.

Waiting periods that now stretch five and six years for Chinese wanting to join their brothers or sisters in the United States will probably be cut in half under the regulations, officials said, and there will be almost oo delay for those joining their children or par-ents, often ending separations that have lasted more than three dec-

Quotas Doubled

Starting in February, several hundred more immigrants will be admitted from mainland China each month, Mr. Macias said. Peking's quota will nearly double from an average of 75 to 145, and the U.S. Consulate in Canton will process 60 percent more than its past average of about 500 a month, Mr. Macias said, other for 30 or 40 years and who lost touch for much of that time due to the lack of relations be-tween the U.S. and China," an embassy official said. "In many respects, this is family reunification work and the most human part of the normalization of relations between the two countries."

Some mainland-born Chinese now in Hong Kong and on Taiwan will continue to come under the mainland quota, but within two years or so most of the additional 20,000 slots will go to immigrants from the mainland, embassy offi-cials said.

Unexpected Actioo

The congressional action, which embassy officials said had not been anticipated and was enacted as a rider on the foreign aid bill with little discussion, relieved the Reagan administration of the decision of setting priorities through other legislation for would-be immigrants from Taiwan as opposed to those from the mainland

Chun Urges Vigilance on North Korea

Seoul Leader Warns Of New Provocations

The Associated Press SEOUL - President Chun Doo Hwan said Thursday he is concerned about possible provocaoons by North Korea because of what he called the North's economic failure last year. He claimed the North is "check-ing and complementing" its war capabilities for the occasioo of the 70th birthday of its president, Kim Il Sung, on April 16.

Some South Korean leaders have expressed apprehension that the North may use Mr. Kim's birthday as an excuse to drive its people toward preparing war against the South to unify the di-vided land.

Addressing a meeting of top military and civilian officials in charge of counterinfiltration operations, the president said he under-stood North Korea's economy "has reached its limits" and verges on collapse.

System Criticized

He said this is largely because of the "mefficiency, inflexibility and low productivity" incidental to the Communist economic system, which he said has also characterized the upbeaval in Poland.

The gap in national strength be-tween North and South Korea is thus being expanded, be contin-ued, adding be is worried that the North may try to intensify unrest on the Korean peninsula to "disrupt our economic advances."

U.S. Flight Reported

TOKYO (AP) - A U.S. SR-7f reconnaissance plane flew over North Korea twice Wednesday. Pyongyang's Korean Central News Agency said Thursday. There were 14 other alleged infiltrations of North Korean airspace by SR-71s this mooth, it said, adding that U.S. maneuvers to unleasin a oew war in Korea have reached a very dangerous

In contrast to the secrecy usually surrounding KGB officers, articles attributed to Gen. Tsvigun appeared from time to time in ideological publications, most recently in the September issue of Kom-munist, in which be claimed that the dissident movement had been

In 1977, Gen. Tsvigun was decorated as a Hero of Socialist Labor and last year be was enrolled in the Central Committee of the Communist Party.

World War II Record

The television obituary described him as an army general who fought on several fronts in World War II and subsequently rose through the KGB ranks in the republics of Moldavia, Tadzhikistan and Azerbaijan.

In 1967, he was named deputy chairman and then first deputy chairman of the KGB, ranking second to Yuri A. Andropov, the Politburo member who beads the organization.

Backaches Growing More Pervasive

By Jane E. Brody New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Backache, a crippling ailment of staggering dimensions, is growing more costly and pervasive every year, according to recent reports. Sooner or later four out of five Americans - from sedentary businessman to truck driver to tennis player, from pregnant woman to office secre-tary to overweight homemaker — will be forced off their feet by pain

Recent victims have included Tracy Austin, the young tennis champion who was temporarily hobbled by sciatica last winter. and Associate Justice William H. Rehnquist of the Supreme Court, who recently suffered a mind-affecting reaction to medication he had been taking for a persistent back ailment.

The cost of back problems, already well in excess of $14 billion a year in the United States, is the price its victims and the nation are paying, many experts believe, for sedentary living babits, hazardous work patterns and back-wrenching eisure activities.

Surgery Fails

Backaches prompt more than 19 million doctor visits and strike about eight million new victims each year, on top of the 75 million already afflicted. Every year 200,000 people undergo surgery for persistent low back pain, as did Reinquist a decade ago. But sur-gery fails completely, as it did for Rehnquist, in about 20 percent of cases, and three out of five patients continue to have symptoms despite

Though drugs to relieve pain or relax muscles are nearly always prescribed to alleviate back pain, they are not a cure for common back problems and, if overused, become habit-forming and actually perpetuate the ailment, experts say.

Research on back ailments has lagged far behind the study of other disorders of comparable scope, probably because backaches are not life-threatening and because 90 percent of them subside by themselves within two months. But thanks largely to pioneering studies in Sweden and some isolated studies elsewhere, much is known about the causes of back pain and bow to prevent and re-

Low back pain, as the leading cause of activity restrictions among people under 45, cuts into the most productive time of life. For about half of its victims, it becomes a recurring affliction that repeatedly disrupts normal habits of work and play and for about 2 percent it becomes a chronic problem that dominates their lives.

Devitalizing

"Lingering back pain is emasculating, devitalizing, fatiguing and commonly causes depression," re-marked Dr. Bernard Jacobs, an orthepedic surgeon at Cornell University Medical College and the Hospital for Special Surgery in terious," he added. No specific cause for the pain can be determined in half or more of patients,

In many people, psychological stress, now known to play an im-portant role in precipitating back-aches, is responsible for pain in a back weakened for other reasons. Under stress, many people tighten muscles that may then go into painful spasms. The spasms constrict circulation to back muscles, intensifying the pain.

"Pain begets pain," Jacobs noted. "Pain makes people tense and anxious, creating a vicious cycle of increasing pain. Much treatment is now focused on inter-cepting that cycle through relaxa-tion techniques and exercises that reduce muscular tension," as well as changing life and work habits that stress the back.

However, oo specific "back per-sonality" has been identified and experts are quick to point out that many of the emotional problems seen in back patients are more likely to be the result of the ailment than the cause.

Sports Risk

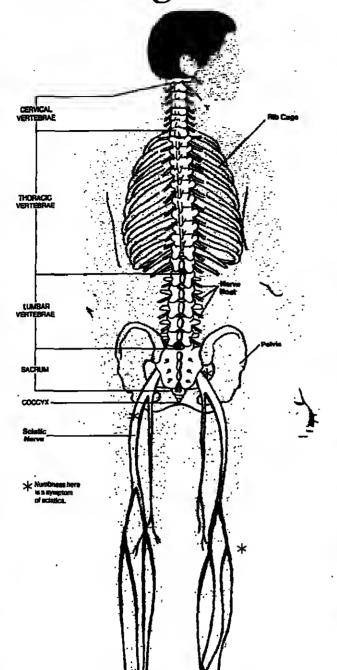

Sometimes, however, the very activities people use to unwind place their backs at risk of injury. Racket sports (which involve twisting of the body and sudden starts and stops), fontball and other lei-sure activities are prime causes of injuries to the neck as well as the lower back, Jacobs said. Safer sports include walking, swimming (the crawl and backstroke), jogging (on grass or a wooden track), bicy-cling in an upright posture and cross-country skiing, be added.

In fact, recent studies point to regular exercise that strengthens muscles and reduces flab as critical to preventing backaches. In Sweden, Dr. Alf L. Nachemson, an internationally renowned back expert, showed that exercise important the delivery of nutrients to proved the delivery of nutrients to spinal disks, perhaps delaying the deterioration that eventually afflicts all backs.

Though disk disease has long been blamed for most back problems, experts oow say that it accounts for only 5 to 10 percent of counts for only 5 to 10 percent of cases. Autopsies have shown that many people who never experienced serious back pain had disk disease. Rather, 80 to 85 percent of back pain is now attributed to muscular weakness, and the remaining 10 percent is a result of maining 10 percent is a result of structural defects or disease, such as malformed vertebrae, arthritis, a numor or a dislocation of the facet joints between two vertebrae.

Poor Work Conditions

Second only to colds as leading cause of time lost from work in the United States, backaches are, irooically, often caused by working conditions - the many hours white-collar workers sit in poorly designed chairs and the strained postures and beavy lifting com-mon among blue-collar workers.

Most back pain occurs in lumbar region.

Yet this costly and common problem has been neglected as a ubject for medical research. A symposium in Florida, co-spon-sored a year ago by the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism and Digestive Diseases, the Ameri-can Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons and the Orthopedic Research Society, raised more questions than it answered about the causes, diagnosis and treatment of this ailment. Nachemson, of Sweden's University of Goteborg, told the meeting that "not more than 20 people in the world" are seriously studying the problem. The sciatic nerve, which extends from the lumbar region down the volved in crippling back pain: Sometimes ocrves are pinched when interlocking facet joints (the will eliminate the need for 60 to 70 percent of operations to remove damaged disks. The enzyme, chy-

Between each pair of vertebrae is a cushioning disk made of a ge-latinous center and fibrous hot still flexible collagen around the out-side. One cause of back pain and the pain or numbness of sciatica is degeneration or protrusion of a disk, causing it to press on a nerve root. (The popular notion of a "slipped disk" is a misuomer, since the disk does out slip but rather bulges, or berniates.)

Jacobs and others are hoping for approval of a highly controversial mopapain, is derived from the pa-paya; when injected into the disk, it is said to dissolve the center and take pressure off the nerve, elimitake pressure off the nerve, eliminating pain in a large percentage of cases. Though chymopapain is already approved in Canada, in the United States controlled clinical studies are still in progress to test its effectiveness and safety. test its effectiveness and safety. Though the human propensity for back trouble is often said to result from the privilege of walking on two legs, some experts, including White, dispute the supposed evolutionary inadequacy of the human

Natural selection played little role in modifying the spine for human habits, some scientists be-lieve, since back troubles largely arise after people are past reproductive age.

From evidence gathered throughout the world, low back pain seems to be primarily the re-sult oot of biomechanical sbortcomings, but rather of hiomechanical abuse, obesity, the aging process and that hallmark of affluence, sedentary living. ce, sedentary living.

Obesity Obesity greatly increases the weight that the spine must support and consequently the pressure on spinal disks. Flabby abdominal muscles deprive the spine of a crucial source of support. Muscles usually reach their maximum strength around the age of 20, when disks also begin to slowly de-teriorate. The first attack of low back pain typically occurs between the ages of 30 and 40. As the U.S. life expectancy continues to increase, back problems are likely to increase as well. Nachemson, the Swedish ortho-pedist, has demonstrated by directly measuring the pressure on spi-nal disks that, compared with standing sitting increases the pres-sure by 40 percent, while lying down decreases it to a quarter of the pressure incurred by standing. This explains why many back victims feel more comfortable standing than sitting. If a person slouches in a seat or if the seat lacks support at the lower back, the pressure oo the disks increases significantly. Sneezing, laughing or coughing also raises disk pressures.

Similarly, researchers have shown that bending from the waist deprives the back of a critical source of support — the back mus-cles, which must relax to allow the body to flex - and places abnormal and uneven pressures on spi-nal disks. If something heavy is lifted from that posture, whether it is a carton or a baby, the pressure on lumbar disks may increase threefold. This is why so many hack injuries occur from lifting.

Dr. Stover H. Snock, a biotechnologist with the Liberty Mutual Insurance Company and Harvard School of Public Health, says that those at highest risk of disabling low back injuries are truck drivers (who alternate heavy lifting with extended periods of sitting and bouncing, which compresses the spinal disks), material handlers jects, and ourses and ourses' aides, who are material bandlers of a dif-

Esso Canada Awards Bids for 6 Artificial Islands

BOISE, Idaho — Northern Construction, a subsidiary of Morrison-Knudsen, and Loram Construction of Calgary have received a contract worth 107 million Canadian dollars ($89.5 million) from Eccon's Esso Resources Canada to build six artificial oil drilling islands, Morrison-

The islands will be built in the Mackenzie River at Norman Wells in the Northwest Territories, the company said. Esso Canada will drill as many as 17 wells from each of the islands.

DeLorean Cuts Output, Presses Luxury Car Plans

LONDON - DeLorean Motor has substantially cut sports car production from last October's peak of 80 units a day but is pressing ahead

Official sources put current production at around 40 cars a day. The spokesman declined comment on a government decision to extend two loan guarantees to DeLorean.

Nippon Electric Plans 2,000 Robots a Year by '85

TOKYO — Nippon Electric Co. plans to increase sales of industrial robots to about 2,000 units a year by 1985 — 10 times current annual sales — the company said Thursday.

A spokesman said the company hopes to start exporting next year, but is cautious in view of high unemployment in many countries. It hopes to sell about 200 industrial robots in Japan in the year starting in April, compared with about 50 in the current fiscal year, Earlier this week NEC unveiled a new robot, the 3.8-million-yen ($16,800) Model-C, capable of assembling, processing, inspecting and Japan supplied about 30 percent of the tube-steel products used in the United States in the first nine months of last year, according to the B&W petrion.

The U.S. steel companies contend that the Japanese are taking market share from U.S. firms in seamless alloy pressure pipes and tubes, used by the utility boiler industry, and in seamless heat-resistant pipes and tubes and seamless stainless pipes and tubes used in the petrochemical, chemical and refining industries.

Babcock & Wilcox has oo plans to file complaints against any Eu-ropean firms, Mr. Krebs said. Not all product areas are losing money as a result of Japanese imports, but seamless alloy pressure products lost market share last year, and profits dropped for the seamless heat-resistant and seam-less stainless goods, Mr. Krebs said. He would not elaborate.

A few employees have been laid off as a result, he said. Joining in the complaint were Al Tech Specialty Steel of Dunkirk, N.Y.; ITT Harper of Morton Grove, Ill., a subsidiary of International Telephone and Telegraph;

The specialty steel industry is a $215-million business in the Unit-

Babcock & Wilcox filed dumping charges about two years ago, but the ITC ruled against them. The U.S. International Trade Court in New York later ordered the ITC on appeal to reconsider the case, however, and advised Babcock & Wilcox to file a new complaint.

In a related matter, the International Iron and Steel Institute reported Thursday that crude steel production dropped in the Com-mon Market and Japan last year, but rose by 7.3 percent in the United States. Preliminary estimates put world crude steel production at 710.3 million tons against 717.5 million in 1980.

After much-improved second and third quarters, U.S. output ended the year at 108.2 million metric tons, 7.4 million tons up-on percent, dropping by 10.3 million tons to 101.7 million, and the EEC registered a 2.2-percent decrease, falling 2.8 million tons to 125 mil-

SEC Probes Dean Witter Trading

WASHINGTON — The Securities and Exchange Commission is investigating possible insider trading in the stock of Dean Witter Reynolds before its takeover last October by Sears, Roebuck & Co., according to sources familiar with the investigation.

It could not be learned who the targets of the investigation are. Public records show heavy trading in Dean Witter options and stock in the days before the $607 million acquisition.

On Oct. 8. Sears agreed to acquire Dean Witter by paying $50 a share in a cash and stock transacon. On Oct. 7. Dean Witter had called for a halt in trading of its stock and options, but not before a two-day buying spree had sent the stock from less than $26 a share to more than $35 a share. In addition, options in Dean Witter stock were traded heavily the week before the acquisition.

Some SEC officials involved in the investigation have complained privately that Sears executives were being afforded unusually lenient treat-ment, according to former commission officials familiar with the complaints.

Conflicting Reports

Ernest L. Arms, Sears news director, said the retailer was cooperating with SEC officials who were gathering information at Sears' Chicago headquarters. But, he added, "We have no reason to believe that the company or any employee is a target of the investigation." SEC officials declined

The price of silver hit a record $50 an ounce on Jan. 21, 1980, then plunged steadily until it bottomed out at $10.85 on March 28, wiping out hillions of dollars of paper profits for silver speculators, including the Hunts. The Comex claimed the change in rules was necessary because the Hunts and a few other speculators had acquired vast numbers of silver futures contracts and were artificially inflating the price.

The Hunts, on the other hand, repeatedly have accused silver market insiders of changing the rules of the game and forcing poces down to further their own inter-

Roderick M. Hills, a Washington lawyer, handled the takeover negotiations on behalf of Sears. Mr. Hills, who was chairman of the SEC under former President Gerald R. Ford and advised President Reagan on the selection of a new chairman, also represents Sears in the current inquiry.

Mr. Hills said that he had "volunteered a written sequence of events" about the takeover "some time ago" to John M. Fedders, the head of en-forcement for the SEC but that the commission had not begun asking Sears for information "until this week."

Bundesbank said it would cut its special Lombard rate to 10 percent from 10½ percent in a move intended to stimulate the country's flagging economy.

The Dutch central bank later said its bank rate will be lowered to 8.5 percent from 9 percent Friday because of the positive effects on the guilder of developments in the Dutch current account. The Dutch and West German economies are closely aligned.

And the Bank of England cut its interest rate for buying short-term hills by 1/2 percentage point to 14 percent Thursday, the fourth cut in short-term rates in as many days.

Some analysts said the British cuts may reflect the government's desire to get interest rates down to improve business prospects, but others said the fall in interest rates is largely the result of technical factors. They said there is a temporary shortage of money on the mooey markets and the Bank of

Joint action had been rumored because finance ministers and central bank officials of major Western countries met last weekend in

When the Bundesbank last lowered the Lombard rate, in December, the move coincided with cuts in key lending rates by the U.S. Federal Reserve as well as the Dutch and Swiss central banks.

The Bundesbank's Thursday acforeign exchange dealers here were surprised that the hank went ahead with the cut in light of an upswing in U.S. interest rates and a

Despite the cut, the U.S. dollar fell Thursday afternoon in Frankfurt and closed at 2.2965 Deutsche marks, near the day's lows and be-low Wednesday's 2.3025 finish.

The Lombard rate stands 2 percentage points below the peak it held during most of last year when the Bundesbank was trying to defend the Deutsche mark against

Thursday morning, before the announcement, Deutsche mark domestic call money rates stood at around 9½ percent, down from 10% percent last Friday, market sources said.

Aiding Economy

But bankers pointed out that the Bundesbank in large measure cre-ated the relaxed money market cooditions, and they see worry about the strong dollar overridden by the need to help the economy. Finance Minister Hans Matthofer welcomed the cut, saying the right conclusions have been drawn from the clear and lasting improvement in West Germany's external economic position.

The reaction from West German industry and banking associations generally was positive, although they said that moderate wage settlements are needed if the economy is to benefit from the cut.

The man with exceptional goals needs an exceptional bank.

What makes Trade Development Bank exceptional? To start with, there is our policy of concentrating on things we do unusually well. For example, trade and export financing, foreign exchange and banknotes, money market transactions and precious metals. Geographically, too, we work mainly in areas where we have something special to offer. This includes the U.S.A., where our subsidiary, Republic National Bank of New York, is one of America's 25 largest banks. It also includes a number of less familiar countries, where our exceptional knowledge of local conditions can be an important advantage for dients.

What's more, we keep our backoffice systems running abreast of our business. You may not notice this directly, but it shows up in quicker decisions and fewer errors. While we move fast in serving our clients, we're distinctly traditionalist in our basic policies. At the heart of our business is the maintenance of a strong and diversified deposit base. Our portfolio of assets is also welldiversified, and it is a point of principle with us to keep a conservative ratio of capital to deposits and a high degree of liquidity - sensible strategies in these uncertzin times.

If TDB sounds like the sort of bank you would like to entrust with your business, get in touch with us. We're ready to serve you in most of the world's financial centers.

JOHANNESBURG — For the state-controlled Southern Oil Exploration — the only firm searching for oil and gas off the South African coast — 1981 was the best year since the South African search for oil began 16 years ago, managing director P.J. Van Zijl said Thursday.

Mr. Van Zijl said the company doubled the number of test wells it sank last year in the area south of Mossel Bay. He said that seven wells yielded promising amounts of gas and light oil. PLAYMATES FOR THE PASHA

Presimists, are as numerous, in today's market, as a Pasha's female Playmates, but infinitely less appealing. They continue to spew out tales of woe, in the same manner they expounded upon their fears in the mid-summer of 1981, predicting a total collapse. At that time, our edictors defied Apocalyptic charts, projecting an upswing in the Averages. And now."

Quo Vadis?

Many stock market legends incubate during complose markets; and in our current letter, we low-priced oil equity, selling (oic) around $2.25, that could emerge as another NATOMAS or PETRO LEWIS; in addition, we major graphite deposit in North America. Trading over-the-counter in Toronto, at $5.25 and soon to be listed on an Exchange, the and soon to be issed on an exchange, the shares may spark a mining boom reminiscent of the Blind River uranium era, when an unknown equity called CONSOLIDATED. DENISON, catapulted from pennies to a high of $105, ultimately becoming listed, changing its name to DENISON MINES. We believe in the hope, mentor, preceptor and example to all men. The incursions of self-serving purveyors of doom will not about the dynamics of a free, creative economy. In every report, we stress the adage that one must "buy into weakness", and "sell into strength". For guidance as to "what" to buy, and "when", please write for your complimentary copy of this report.

MERMAID

By Margaret Millar. 215 pp. $11.50. William Morrow, 6 Henderson Drive, West Caldwell, N.J. 07006 Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

TN Margaret Millar's "Mermaid." people trade punch lines instead of punches, and some of the suspense derives from the question of whether ber anti-heroic investigator Aragon can continue to be faithful to his wife under the pressure of all the predatory women one meets in suspense novels. In the better private eye or spy ficin the better private eye or spy fic-tion, irony is becoming the principal weapon of the protagonist and Ara-gon, Millar's lawyer-investigator was born for irony. He is a Chicano, "a Chicano in horn-rimmed glasses," as one character puts it. His method of detection is to ask the kind of questions psychoanalysts ask and then sift through the ensuing guilt. In "Mermaid," Aragon is hired by a rich and powerful businessman to find his young disturbed sister Cleo, who has escaped from the special school she attends. He is afraid that in her innocence, Cleo will become a victim of at least one of the world's various forms of cupidity.

Cleo's innocence is so attractive, so sexy, that it tempts Lennard, one of the school's bomosexual counselors, to try to marry her. Like all the other to try to marry her. Like all the other tormented people in this book, Lemnard has an unreasonable father. Cleo's brother, who acts as her father, is over-protective; Lennard's father is threateningly macho; Donny, a disturbed boy in Cleo's school, has an under-protective playboy for a father. Millar, who is married to mystery writer Ross Macdonald, seems to be moving in on his turf, for he specializes in the runaway adolescent. Though they are well-written, his novels sometimes make it seem as if the els sometimes make it seem as if the adolescent were the principal victim of crime in the United States.

Millar may not feel the same. In her Millar may not feel the same. In her hands, Cleo seems more like what Rollo May calls "pseudo-innocent" — a term he originally applied to the flower children or hippies of the '60s. May sees pseudo-innocence as a fraud, a begging of all the basic questions in American life. One might go forther and say that Cleo's insanity further and say that Cleo's insanity resembles a sort of ultimate or exacerbated selfistness, an unwillingness to share common disciplines or frames of reference. When Mrs. Holbrook, who runs Cleo's school, asks "How many lives should be warped for the sake of one disturbed child?" she seems to be reacting against what might be called the psychopathology of American youth. Like Aragon, Millar is quite an ironical investigator herself. When Cleo's brother needs his lawyer, that gentleman is off hunting capercaillie in Scotland. Even to know what capercaillie are, one must, presumably, be over-indulged. There is an ironical Lieutenant Peterson, too, in the po-lice. Besides inviting himself to dinner at a suspect's house, he says, "A lot of policemen would like people to be-lieve that we go around solving crimes by taking fingerprints and making plaster casts and ballistics tests. Now these things all look good in a court-room once the criminal is on trial. But how he's caught is usually a different story. Somebody squealed, a disgruntled employee or partner, a jealous lover, a cast-off wife. These are the people who solve crimes."

Whatever else happens in "Mer-maid." Millar can always be counted on for some good lines or moments. Poor confused Lennard, Cleo's homosexual fiance, thinks that she should vote. And indeed there would be poetic justice at this moment in our history to allow the legally insane also to

The Latin-American cook in Cleo's brother's house complains about the silence there. She would like to bear a tittle noise, she says, people laughing, even crying. Whilfield, the father of the disturbed Donny, looks at him and thinks "this was his son, his only child, and he couldn't bear to look at him, to touch him, even to be in the same room with him."

Any experienced reader would be able to tell early in "Mermaid" that Cleo will come to no good, because she mistreats a dog. It's not much to go on, perhaps, but in subtle or highbrow fiction you have to take what you can get. Like the mermaid of the book's title, Cleo remains a purely fictional creature. Even the talented Miller apparently, doesn't know how to lar, apparently, doesn't know how to, hook this odd fish.

BRIDGE.

By Alan Truscott

IT is 3 a.m. and George Stein-brenner is pitching for the Yank-ces in the World Series. To make it harder for his opponents to run the hases, he has hired two more top teams to play on the same field simultaneously, at right angles.

This is clearly a bizarre nightmare, perhaps the product of an excess of Christmas spirit. But something com-parable was happening 12 days ago at a bridge tournament in Reno, Nev. and some of the world's best players were involved.

Playing the Steinbrenner role was Mei Skolnik of Newport Beach, Calif., a 38-year-old financier similarly en-dowed with great determination and a willingness to spend large sums of money in pursuit of his goals. At the first tournament of 1981, soon after attaining life-master rank, he made up his mind to win the prestigious McKenney Trophy, awarded to the player winning most master points in a year. Among the names on the trophy are some of the greatest figures in the game: Charles Goren, Helen So-bel, Oswald Jacoby, Tobias Stone, Norman Kay and Edgar Kaplan.

Skolnik planned a Napoleonic cam-paign with Ron Andersen and Paul Soloway, both previous McKenney winners, as his chiefs of staff. Among his junior officers, seeing action in se-lected battles, were Mark Lair, Eddie Wold, Ron Smith, Bohby Levin, Peter Weichsel, Garey Hayden and Gaylor Kasle — enough talent for two World Championship-winning teams.

All went well for six months, and Skolnik led in the race. But then Barry

Crane, the match-point wizard from Hollywood who has the world's biggest collection of master points, made a strong bid to win his fifth McKen-ney title, though trailing by 356 points. When the year's final tournament began in Reno on Dec. 26, he trailed Skolnik by 125 points, a margin that was likely - but not certain - to be decisive.

Crane scored heavily by winning two pairs events and placing second in another, but Skolnik stayed ahead by winning the knockout teams. His lead was 41 points at the start of the concluding event, the Swiss Teams, Three hours from the end of the tournament and four from the end of the year, Crane still had a chance, but be could not quite manage the victory that would have snatched the McKenney Tropby from Skolnik.

In the scramble for points, both players were competing in every possi-ble event, sometimes beginning play at 8:45 a.m. and ending at 3 a.m. Some unusual strategies were developed for the occasion. While Skolnik competed in the non-smoking division of a pairs championship, some of his troops were assigned to the smoking division in an attempt, vain as it turned out, to prevent a Crane victo-

A more unusual case of running interference occurred in a speedball Swiss Teams beginning at midnight. This event would usually be spurned by the experts, but 12 master points would go to the winners and every point seemed vital. So, the Skolnik army entered two teams, as did Crane, in the hope of making life harder for the opposition. This was a strange sit-uation without parallel, and suggests the Steinbrenner nightmare with which this column began. In the final match of this event, one Skolnik regiment met another, creating a tricky ethical situation. Officials monitored the play to satisfy them-selves that everyone was performing with the expected vigor. One strange deal from this match is shown in the diagram.

It can be seen that six clubs for -East-West was unbeatable, while six . spades would have required doubledummy defense. After a highly competitive auction. Soloway as South had to decide whether to defend against that contract. East's five-hearthid conventionally showed two aces; so, the chances of defense were not. good.

After long thought, Soloway bid seven diamonds, which was right in practice. Against six spades, he would not have underled his heart ace, permitting his partner to return the club singleton for a ruff. If West had held the club ace, he might have led that card, permitting the double grand slam to make. But he led the spade king and shifted to the club king.

It was necessary to guess the hearts. 3.

and South did so. He announced that to he would draw trumps and eventually play East for the heart queen. He judged that West would not have bid Blackwood with two quick heart losers. In the replay, the same con-tract went down two; so, Soloway gained 5 international match points. And as he was playing for the Skolnik second regiment at the time, he gained them against his commanding officer. though losing the match.

Hockey's Gretzky Joining Millionaires' Club

From Agency Dispatches

EDMONTON, Alberta -Wayne Gretzky, the Edmonton Oilers high-scoring center, and Peter Pocklington, the club's owner, have agreed to renew a 21-year contract that will make Gretzky the highest-paid player in National Hockey League history at more than $1 million a year.

At a news conference prior to Edmonton's game against St. Lou-is Wednesday night, Pocklington said the renegotiated deal is in terms of nine, six and six years, with antomatic renegotiation after the first nine years and again six years later.

"In the first nine-and six-year periods, with the bonuses and Wayne's leadership, if they go all the way - and I think they will he will earn more than $20 million in 15 years," Pocklington said. The Oilers have the option for the final on the dotted line." Gretzky said.

Pocklington said the contract is "the most innovative ever offered" an NHL player. He said the contract also includes "a large piece of real estate that will be his in six years." He identified it as a shopping center in western Canada.

Gretzky, who turns 21 next Tuesday, was not on hand for the announcemen! But after scoring three goals and adding two assists as the Oilers beat the Blues, 8-6. Gretzky said: "I intend to earn my money ... I believe the Oilers are entitled to full value for what they pay me and I intend to give them Pocklington said the terms were agreed upon last Friday. The contract has not, however, been signed.

NEW YORK — University officials have reacted strongly to Texas A&M's decision to pay Jackie Sherrill, its new football coach, $287,000 a year, calling this highest salary at a U.S. college or university "wild" and "beyond reason," among other things. Some members of the A&M faculty even members of the A&M faculty even Sherrill, the coach at the University of Pittsburgh for the last five seasons, accepted a six-year offer nf $1,722,000 in cash and extra nefits Tuesday to become the athletic director and football coach at Texas A&M.

of Sherrill's salary will be paid by voluntary donations to the athletic institution. Frank E. Vandiver, the president of Texas A&M, said, "An athletic department of the first class at A&M is essential.

And I don't think that anything of the first class comes cheap."

But James Craig, assistant dean of the school of architecture at Texas A&M and a starting tackle for the school in the early 1960s. said: "It is hard to relate to that kind of money living here in academia. His salary seems kind of out of proportion when you stop and think about it, particularly when I see national scholars in the top rank making less than that for

As well, a survey of university presidents and chancellors indicates that no other person in a U.S. university is being paid as much as Sherrill in salary for work performed on university assign-

David Saxon, president of the hnge University of California sys-tem said: "It is wild, just wild to pay a football coach that much The highest paid salary persons of the 6,000 professors over our sys-tem would be deans of the various medical schools. They can earn up to $100,000 a year."

Saxon and a number of other chief university executive officers agreed that the average salary for a full professor with some time in the post and tenure is between $60,000 and $75,000 annually. They also agreed that they knew of no university president or chancellor earning as much as Sherill will

Howard R. Swearer, president of Brown University, which is a member of the Ivy League, said: "It is so far beyond reason or im-agination. I have never heard of a salary like that in colleges. It also begins to make the connection between intercollegiate sports and professional sports when they are throwing around that kind of moncy ... It is really appailing

We've shaken hands and the deal is made as far as I'm concerned. The official signing will take place as soon as the revised contracts have been typed and they've been looked over by my agent Gus Ba-

The agreement allowed Gretzky tn surpass Marcel Dionne of the Los Angeles Kings, who is earning about $600,000 per year, as the highest paid player in the NHL.

Greizky was only 19 when he signed a 21-year personal service contract with Pocklington. That agreement - the longest sporting contract in history — was sup-posed to run until 1999 and reportedly paid the center $150,000 this year plus bonuses.

However, after reviewing his awesome list of records, the Oilers' superstar asked to renogotiate his pact this past summer.

In his first NHL season (1979-80), Gretzky tied Dionne for the scoring championship with 137 points but lost the title because Dionne scored more goals. Last season, Gretzky left nn doubt about the scoring title as be finished with 164 points, 29 more than Dionne. Along the way, Gretzky shattered Bobby On's NHL record for assists, finishing with 109, and Phil Espositn's record for points.

This season, Gretzky has been even better. He shattered Maurice Richard's record of 50 goals in 50 games by scoring 50 in 39 games and he is on the way to breaking Esposito's single-season record of 76 goals and also becoming the first player to noteh 200 points in a

Southern Way of Life

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — I once went south for a winter vacation. There were palm trees beside the swimming pool, evangelists on the television and hillbilly songs on the radio.

I became interested briefly in lizards, the mechanics of swimming-pool filtration and swamps, but efforts to stir up conversation on these subjects did not win me center stage in the local society. and I quickly gave them up and sat around fidgeting.

"Wby dno't
you just relax?" Baker people asked, so l tried just relaxing. I reclined on a plastic couch by the swimming pool and waited for people to notice that I was relaxing. I wanted them to admire the ripples of re-laxation that were reducing my frame to the consistency of jelly. Instead, I was ignored. I arose and went into the house and said, "I'm outside relaxing." Their indifference was infuriating.

"Why doesn't anybody around here ever want to do anything?" I sbouted. Why doo't you just relax?" was the explanation.

* * * Day after day, the sun shone re-lentlessly. It also rose each morning and set each evening. Sometimes I was roused at dawn to admire the beauty of its rising. When I complained that I hated rising before 10 a.m., people berated me for being tense and not knowing how to relax. Each day's sunset was awaited, watched and criticized as avidly as a new production by the Royal Shakespeare Company, Afterward, people drank cocktails that tasted of coconut and pineapple and coconut and pineapple and gloated over news reports that Kansas City was freezing and congratulated themselves on not being in Kansas City, though none of us would have been in Kansas City in any case since we all had jobs that kept us in New York.

If knocking Kansas City was relaxing, I wanted none of it. I once spent two beautiful autumn days in Kansas City and met some historians who gave me an exhilarating argument demonstrating that my theory of history was childish nonsense. What's mare, they served a very good Bordeaux that didn't taste of coconut or pine-

Thinking of those entertaining people in that lovely city suffering a miserable 10 degrees Fahrenheit only saddened me. "I hope the wind-chill factor isn't really brutal tonight in Kansas City," I said.
"Oh, shut up and relax," somebody said.

Next day, the sun failed to rise. Instead, 22 inches of rain fell with such force that two or three inches of water were blown right through the windowpanes. The sense of imminent catastrophe was almost as powerful as it is on a typical day in New York, and I was thoroughly relaxed when we bedded down on the damp floor to watch a rerun of the Rev. Rex Humbard conducting a television service.

Soaked in the bone though l was, I had one of those inspired ideas that come only from the deepest wells of pure relaxation. Telephoning several historians I remembered from a few years back, I told them how lucky they were to be in Kansas City.

A few days later, the sum resumed rising, shining and setting. The break the bypnotic regularity of the day, I switched to cocktalls that tested of manges and have that tasted of mangoes and ba-nanas. One evening we went to admire the exterior of a house that had been remodeled at buge cost by a man who bad made a fortune gning blue jeans for the rich. Afterward, we dined in a restau-rant that smelled of shrimp marinated in coconut and pineapple, and the table was lighted with burricane lamps, and the waiter brought a plate of carrots sliced so thin that they curled up like wood shavings.

I hate restaurants that lavish doting care on their carrot slicings. and I hated this one doubly when the carrot slices turned out to taste like frangipani. Nnt knowing bow tn pronnunce frangipani,) couldn't complain without inviting the waiter to sneer at me as an illi-

I could only sulk and refuse to eat, which made everybody happy by giving them occasion to say, "Why don't you just relax?"

Afterward, we went bome and watched the Rev. Oral Roberts on television. Eventually I returned to New York so shattered that it took three gridlocks to restore my New York Times Service

Avalanches

Scientists Hope to Use Low-Frequency Sound Waves In the Bottom Layer of Ice to Develop Detectors

With great locus, todamed stab states over depth how granules, greating everything on its costs.

By Philip Shenon New York Times Service

NEW YORK - On a sunny Ron Perla found himself on ski patrol perched atop a block of snow, many hundreds of yards wide, that was itself perched above a long, slick ski run.

Suddenly, the snow gave way under his weight, touching off an avalanche. Beneath thick blankets of powder, he was carried half a mile down the Utah moun-tain at about 100 miles an hour. He fell unconscious. Rescuers later told Perla they had dug him out of an icy tomb - the fingers of his left hand were all that had shown above the snow piled at the bottom of the slope.

Since then, Perla has retained a respect for avalanches that borders oo awe. The power that soft, white snow can have during an avalanche is just astounding," be said, recalling wby he chose to join the small band of men and women, no more than 300 in the world, who have devoted their careers to avalanche science. He is today an avalanche researcher Canadian National Hydrolngy Research Institute in Canmore, Alberta. Uotil recently, little was known about avalanches. For generations, Swiss mountaineers blamed them no vindictive trolls, and for most of the 20th century, scientific understanding of avalanches was little more advanced than the alpine folklore.

Warning Call

But research in the last decade has guided snow scientists to a new appreciation of avalanche dynamics. Scientists now know that avalanches usually release a warning call before striking. They report that avalanches can be predicted and — with architectural, computer and sound-detectioo techniques still under development — controlled.

"In just the last couple of years, many of the avalanche's mysteries have been solved," said Mario Martinelli Jr., who in 1962 founded the federal Mountain Snow and Avalanche Research Project in Fort Collins, Coln. The Fort Collins project, run by the U.S. Forest Service, is the larger of the United States' two major avalanche research centers; the nther is at Montana State University at Bozeman.

Layers of snow criticarly achieve to steep side of a mountain, residing the force of gravity.

Martinelli said that after years of analyzing snow samples from avalanche tracts, scientists have identified the culprit in most large snowslides: a granular, un-stable layer of ice that develops deep beneath mountain snow. The layer is known in scientific jargon as "depth hoar."

How is it formed? The mountain earth and rock buried by snow in the late fall are usually much warmer than the surrounding air. The heat vaporizes the snow nearest the ground and re-places it with angular grains of ice that do not bond well to one another. "Those granules are the depth hoar," Martinelli said. Because of its texture, depth boar is called "sugar snow" by Rocky Mountain natives.

As snow gathers on an ava-lanche path in the winter — the most serious avalanches occur on mountain slopes of from 30 tn 45 degrees — pressure on the depth hoar grows. At some point, gravity combines with the weakness of the depth boar to loosen the stable layers of snow above. During an avalanche, the upper layers break loose and slide across the depth hoar crystals, which act like ball bearings to speed the snow's descent.

Atomic Force

Researchers have estimated that under extreme conditions, a single avalanche can pack as much destructive power as the blast of a small atomic bomb. Even a small avalanche will bury a person in seconds, suffocating him within minutes.

Once the formation of depth hoar was understood, researchers set out to determine how the oew knowledge might be used to predict avalanches and save lives. Richard A. Sommerfeld, geo-chemist at the Fort Collins project, was a pioneer in the ef-fort. Sommerfeld suspected that when the depth hoar layer collapsed before a sonwslide, it might emit a distinctive sound that could be employed in avalanche detection. In research begun in 1973, Sommerfeld decided to test the theory. He buried microphones in avalanche-prone snow tracts around Berthoud Pass, about 80 miles west of Denver, Within weeks, he learned his suspicions had been justified. Several hours before each avalanche observed at the pass, the microphones detected a burst of lnw-frequency sound from the depth hoar.

Low Frequency

"The frequency of the sound waves was too low for the average human ear to notice." he id. "But the microphones could detect it. They told us that the sound corresponded to the instability of a slope."

Within five years, Sommerfeld said, ski-resort owners and mountain rangers may be using similar noise-sensitive equipment to predict snowslides near inhabited areas. Once warning sounds are detected, be explained, avalanches can be set off with explosives when no one is in their way,

There are chies other than sound, however, At Montana State, snow researchers are attempting to determine the climaric and geographic patterns required for avalanche formation. One team of scientists is examining weather records, among other evidence, to determine what combination of snowfall and mountain-slope angles will produce an avalanche. A tricky factor in prediction is the quality nf snow, which can be soft or hard, wet or dry, coarse or smooth.

A partly computerized fore casting system was established by the U.S. Forest Service in 1973 in predict avalanches nver large areas of five Western states. The Fnrest Service already claims 85 percent accuracy in its predictions, but scientists hope to make the surveys even more reliable.

Researchers at Montana State are also studying avalanche me-chanics — the actual movement of snow during a slide - to permit a more precise calculation of avalanche speeds. Once speed is determined, the energy unleashed hy an avalanche can also be mea-

Architects could use this informatioo to design structures against avalanche hazards - to know just how strong to make a wall to withstand an avalanche, for example. In Japan and Ice-land, engineers have recently consulted with snow scientists before construction of what is hoped will be avalanche-resistant buildings.
The developments in snow science have already prevented avalanche deaths in the United States. The number of Americans killed by avalanches each year, now about 15, has not increased since the mid-1960s, despite the boom of population and tourism in the mountain states.

Khashoggi Case Settled; Second Billionaire Sued

Attorney Marvin Mitchelson filed a divorce action seeking about $3 billion in community property. Mitchelson also an-nounced that the Khashoggi suit. previously listed as the largest claim, has been settled out of court. Both cases involve Saudi Arabian billionaires, and the new lawsuit is against Sheikh Mohammet Al-Fassi, 27, who made headlines by painting wildly colored sexual details on statues in front of his Beverly Hills mansino. The California Superior Court suit on behalf of Shelka Dena Al-Fassi, 23, seeks to have his two other marriages dissolved and to obtain half of all community property. which Mitchelson estimated at more than $6 billion. Mrs. Al-Fassi is the sheikh's first wife and they were married when she was 15. Mitchelson said. She is probably a citizen of Saudi Arabia, Mitchelsoo said, but there is some confusion because she was born in Belgi-um. She and Al-Fassi have three Soraya Khashoggi um. She and Al-rassi have three sons and a daughter — two adopted — who are now 5. 4. 3 and 2 years nid. They are all currently with their father and his other twn Khashoggi lived most uf the time However, Mitchelson said the case has now been "settled amicably," and part of the agreement is tha the terms not be disclosed. Asker wives, Victoria and Aptisam, in Hollywood, Fla., according to Mitchelson, Mitchelson filed the nther lawsuit two years ago against Saudi Arabian billionaire Adman Khashoggi. In that case, Soraya Khashoggi, a British-born beauty who bore five children by the arms tycoon, sued for $2.5 billion, half

"It's nothing like what she was asking for," Ball said. "He harmade a graftitions navment to be made a gratuitous payment to her, just because she is the mother of his five children." In her lawsuit, Mrs. Al-Fassi said that many times since her marriage to the sheikh in 1975 - and as recently as last August - "I have been held a cap-August — I have been nend a cap-tive in a locked room by my hus-band's squad of bodyguards, act-ing on his orders, and prevented fram using a telephone." Mitchel-son said Mrs. Al-Fassi and her husband never lived in the garishly decreated Beverly Hills mansion that caused traffic jams on busy Sunest Roulevard. Neighbors com-Sunset Boulevard. Neighbors complained about the nude statues and the house was gutted early in 1980

Paramount Pictures has said it will not release Francis Coppola's latest movie, "One From the Heart." The studio said the decisinn not in release the $27-million musical was made last week before Coppola's uousual public preview of the film at New Yurk's Radio City Music Hall, but that Para-mount had delayed announcing the move.
